Somewhere in the past year or two I have developed a real yen for scones. We used to have a tea house and various coffee houses in my city that served them, and I would occasionally buy one when the mood hit. Then all of a sudden my city was sconeless. I couldn't get a scone to save my life. I drove to every coffee place and bakery I could find... nothing. So I decided I'd make my own. I added this book to my wish list and my husband bought it for me for Christmas. Since Christmas I have been a scone making machine. As I type the air is filled with the heavenly aroma of fresh out of the oven Apple Oatmeal Scones. I have made several of the recipes and everyone has been easy to follow and wonderfully delicious. Table of Contents: Metric and Imperial Conversions Introduction: Ensconced in Scones Sweet Scones (examples: chocolate chip orange, gingerbread, raspberry filled almond) Savory Scones (examples: hearty grain, potato bacon, rye caraway) Spreads (examples:

curd, clotted cream, maple butter)The Perfect Tea (the authors guide you through some tea time etiquette and ideas)IndexA few of my favorite recipes:Blueberry Coffee Cake Scones - it has a streusel toppingCheese Scones - Cheddar and Parmesan cheese with a dash of red pepper. I served it with chili one night.Apple Oatmeal Scones - with apples, dates, oatmeal and molasses it's a hearty scone and a great on the go breakfast.Citrus Curd - I love lemon curd and this recipe takes it to another level with a bit of orange juice and peel.The recipes call for you to place the scone batter on a buttered 8-9 circle on a cookie sheet, then cut the scones yourself,then bake, and if necessary re-cut.
